Its Action-Resolutions

Adopted. [Special telegram to the Dispatch.]

Fredericksburgo, V.A., March 20.—A meeting in the interest of the proposed Northern Neck railroad was held in the courthouse here to-day, and was attended by the following gentlemen: Hon. W. A. Jones, of Richmond county: Lloyd T. Smith, of Northumberland; Hon. J. E. Mason, Judge C. H. Ashton, and J. J. Mason, of King George: Colonel R. J. Washington, of Westmoreland; A. K. Phillips, Jr. H. P. Johnston, St. George R. Fitzhugh, General Daniel Ruggles, John A. English, John Hayden, Dr. A. C. Doggett, J. D. Murdaugh, Major W. H. Russell, J. J. Embrey, Hon. J. L. Marve, W. A. Little, Sa. and Hon. W. A. Little, Jr., of this city.

The meeting was called to order by Mayor A. P. Rowe, and in the absence of the secretary (Mr. W. S. White) Mr. R. B. Merchant, of the Fredericksburg Star, was requested to act in that capacity. Several letters were read from prominent gentlemen in the Northern Neck expressing their regret at not being able to be present, but manifesting deep interest in the scheme. The meeting adopted the following important resolutions, which were offered by Hon. J. E. Mason, of King George:

Resolved, That the chairman of this meet. [Special telegram to the Dispatch.]

George:

Resolved, That the chairman of this meeting be requested to write at once to every member of the Committee on Statistics who has not reported and ask that the report be sent in by April 15th.

Resolved, That the Committee on Capital be empowered and instructed to take such steps as may be necessary to secure an early organization of the Northern Neck Railroad and Transportation Company recently chartered by the Legislature of Virginia, and that said committee shall comminicate as soon as practicable with such railroad corporations and other financial concerns as it may see fit with a view to interesting capital in the construction of the aforesaid railroad.

There was very much interest manifested and it is rumored that one of the largest railroad corporations in this country has already manifested an interest in the construction of this line. The indications are certainly encouraging for the building of the road. rge:

Mr. Bate alluded to some remarks of Mr. Bate alluded to some remarks of Mr. Bate alluded to some remarks of Mr. Bate in the specific on the bill that reflected on the State of Tennessee as a laggard in regard to her educational interests, and asserted that Tennessee was not a laggard and did not stand in the rear, but occupied a place in the front rank, abreast not only of the times, but of her sisters in the Union.

He said that he had listened patiently and politely to the speech for five or six days, but that he had then grown weary and sought refuge in the House of Representatives and it was then that the remarks to which he took exception were made. His colleague (Mr. Harris) had also retired to the cloak-room. That was the explanation of the remarks not being replied to at the time. He went on to refute the statement made by Mr. Blair to show the liberal provision which the State of Tennessee had made for common-school education and for colleges and universities. ducation and for colleges and universi-

In the course of his remarks he spoke of a letter of School-Superintendent Moses, of North Carolina (on which Mr. Blair had ed for his statement), as untrue and scanderous.

Coming to speak of the bill itself he opposed it because it would cause the people to rely upon the Federal Treasury for the support and management of the public schools. The head of the Interior Department would be, he said, the dispenser of the matronal funds under the national laws, and having the keys of 169,000 school-houses hanging at his girdle, that girdle would become as potent in politics as the sceptre of any crowned head. The school patronage would be used in the political campaigns of partisan demagogues. The tendency of the bill was dangerous. It fascinated and charmed, but it destroyed. It would lead to despotism. It was a dagger behind a smile—a scrpent coiled beneath a rose.

Mr. Blair rose to close the debate. He appologized to Mr. Ingalls for a heated remark which he had made to-day when that Coming to speak of the bill itself he op-Mr. Blair rose to close the debate. He apologized to Mr. Ingalls for a heated remark which he had made to-day when that Senator submitted the motion, which was unusual; but he now understood that that motion had not been made from an unfriendly feeling to him (Mr. Blair) or to the bill. He did not desire to avail himself of the agreement that he was to occupy an hour in closing the debate, but was willing to submit the matter without further discussion. He desired that the question, which was one between the children of the country and the country itself, should be decided on its merits. He asked for a voice on the bill and pending amendments. Mr. Hawley suggested that the senators had expected that the debate was not to close till 3 o'clock, and that therefore the vote should not be taken before that hour. Mr. Blair recognized the propriety of the suggestion, and set to work to fill up the time by reading an essay which he had prepared on the general subject of the bill. The Senate then proceeded to vote on the bill and the amendments. The first vote was on the three amendments offered by Mr. Moody, of South Dakota, to the effect that the illiterates among the Indians shall be included in the calculations.

Guests at Her Wedding.

A Wilkesbarre special says: Three weeks ago John Bowman and Miss Norah Healy were united in marriage by Father Mack, of Plymouth. The wedding was a brilliant affair, over four hundred guests being present. Among the guests was James Wright, of Philadelphia. The bride was introduced to the Philadelphian for the first time. On Monday evening she eloped with him. She took all her husband's money with her.

She left a message for her husband saying she had just discovered that she had drawn the wrong prize in the marriage lottery. She didn't love him and couldn't live with him. Wright was the man of her choice. The irate husband offers a reward for his wife's arrest.
